

FSSAI directs food platforms to comply with the rules on the display of nutritional value.

FSSAI directs food platforms to comply with the rules on the display of nutritional value.

Food Safety and Standards Authority of India has directed the food delivery brands such as Swiggy and Zomato to ensure compliance with the regulations of displaying the nutritional value of the food on their platforms from 1st July.

In a letter to all Food Business Operators (FBOs), the food regulator asked them to incorporate provisions to display the nutrients information and the calorific value, which can later be displayed to the consumers on their platform.

FSSAI introduced these labelling and display regulations in 2020.

Zomato stated that they allow the display of the nutritional value of foods where the restaurant voluntarily shares the same. However, they are working with restaurant partners to make this mandatory to enable the consumers to make an informed choice.

FSSAI has also asked the regional directors to enforce compliance through e-commerce FBOs.

FSSAI had referred to the provisions of Display of Information in Food Service Establishments as per FSS (Labelling and Display). These regulations are applicable from 1st July 2022.

FSS regulation stated that establishments with a central license or more than ten branches were required to mention the calories alongside the dish's name in the menu/board/rate list. Further, FSSAI stated that this regulation stated that this rule should be extended to E-commerce FBOs.

The regulator also mentions that event caterers and food service providers who work for less than 60 days a year shall be exempted from these regulations.